Adobe Photoshop 2022 (Version 23.1.1) [Win/Mac] [Latest-2022]

Q: What is the difference between Ruby's `String#slice` and `String#slice!`? What is the difference between Ruby's `String#slice` and `String#slice!` methods? According to the documentation they are the same thing, but I noticed that `String#slice!` methods doesn't affect the original string: `str1 = 'abcdefghij' str2 = str1.slice(4..-1) p str2 #=> "cdefghij"` `str1 = 'abcdefghij' str2 = str1.slice!(4..-1) p str2 #=> "abcdefghij"` The documentation says that `String#slice!` adds "twice the arguments, but no argument list.", but that does not seem to be the case: `str1 = 'abcdefghij' str2 = str1.slice!(4..-1,2) p str2 #=> "abcdefghij"` So what exactly is it that makes `String#slice!` affect the original string and `String#slice` modify a new string? A: According to ruby-doc: They behave exactly the same, but if the method is called without an argument then slice returns an empty string as a default, and that string is not printed. So the above example actually looks like: `"abcdefghij".slice!(4..-1) # => ""` A: The documentation isn't very clear on this, but as it suggests, a "default argument" is passed to the method when no other arguments are passed. But that argument isn't just any object, it's a special String object:

class String def slice!(*args, &block)
    if default = args.pop then raise ArgumentError, "can't pop default argument" if default.kind_of?(String) raise ArgumentError, "string to slice required" unless args.empty? end self.slice(*args, &block)
    end end

 As such, passing 'nil' will actually be some sort of slice that's got no arguments. Q: How to compare two values in the form of tuple in perl? I have two [Angiography in the preoperative diagnostic evaluation of hip dysplasia in neonates and infants]. On the basis of our experience with 111 neonates and infants, combined with the literature published in the last 10 years, we are able to come to the following conclusions: the method is recommended to be used for all patients; the type of premature hip dislocation is of greater importance for the determination of the surgical attitude than the degree of dislocation; the extent of necrosis is of primary importance for the decision to apply the modified femoral shortening osteotomy; the acetabular exposure is the most important factor for the success of the operation, it should be widened at least up to the ischium. Both are necessary and both are claimed to be imperfect by the rival sectaries of the Church. The Calvinists to this day strive to impress upon their auditors, Protestant and Catholic, that it is the imperfection of the Church's teaching that they accept, and not its authority. While all the Protestants, under the inspiration of the Holy Spirit, recognize the unity of the Church and confess her universal claim to a divine mission, the Calvinists, in their unyielding state of conviction, regard the Church as in her personality imperfect and antagonistic to their own interests and convictions. In their view she is no longer the Church, but an Episcopalian sect. The Catholics, however, with their profound reverence for the institutions of the Church, and their profound respect for the teaching of the Church and the authority of her teachers, regard the Church as one, and the very organization of the Church as identical with the unity of the Church. They regard the hierarchy as the organization of the Church, and regard the ordination of bishops and priests as an essential element of the Church. In their view of things the bishops are the visible representatives of Christ on earth, and priests his visible teachers. And this view of things makes Catholicism accept and receive as the doctrine of the Church, ancient and modern, the statements of the Councils of Trent, the Gallican Councils, of the English Bishops, and similar promulgations of the general councils.

FOOTNOTES: [1] While in England the Calvinistic sectaries were most numerous and most troublesome, in the United States it
